CONVICTS' FUND.

Intimations That It Has Been Improperty Distributed—An Investigation

COLUMBUS, O., June 8.—There are in timations of an improper use of money belonging to convicts at the peniten-tiary which is on deposit at the warden's office. An investigation now in progress will enlighten the authorities of the institution as to whether certain of their predecessors are guilty of any wrong doing or whether the charges are simply idle talk. It is stated that there is in existence at the penitentiary a fund known as the convict's fund Whenever a prisoner behind the walls acquires any money at all, it is taken by the officials in charge and placed to the convict's credit in this fund. He is given a receipt for the amount.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

International Lesson for June 14, 1896—
Jesus Crucified—Luke 28:88-48.
[Arranged from Peloubet's Notes.]
Golden Text.—Christ died for our sine according to the Scriptures.—I Cor. 15:2. LESSON NOTES.

I. The Trial.—From a little one o'clock Friday morning till sunrise, about half-past five, Jesus was enduring an unjust trial, in some form, before the Jewish authorities. The court was the Jewish sanhedrim. The first meeting was irregular, because it was illegal to try any person before it dur-ing the night. The witnesses were difficult to procure, of the kind sought. But, finally, two false witnesses obtained, who perverted a saying of Jesus, and did not agree even in their perversion. The sentence was pronounced, not from anything the witnesses brought forward, but from Jesus' own confession that He was the Messiah, the Son of God. This they construed as blasphemy, a capital of-fense among the Jews. He was voted to be worthy of death. The sanhedrim then adjourned till dawn, when they met in regular session, and pronounced the formal sentence.

It was now that Peter was "sifted as wheat." Peter, beset and worried by a crowd of menials and roughs, surrounded by darkness, amid unknown dangers, thrice denied his Master, the last time with cursing and swearing. Such conduct was unlike that of a disciple. Jesus' look of reproof was more eloquent than a volume of words, and Peter went out and wept bitterly.

After the latter session of the sanhe-drim, Jesus was taken before Pilate. The religious accusation of blasphemy would be of no account in Pilate' courts, hence it was carefully suppressed Instead of this, the Jews charged Jesus with treason, under the triple accusa tion of (1) sedition, exciting revolt against Rome, (2) rebellion, refusing to pay tribute, and (3) open treason in claiming to be king. The second charge we know was utterly false, and the other two, though true in a sense not true in the sense intended and not at all treasonable. Pilate knew Jesus to be innocent, but wanted to please the Jews. He tried in various ways to escape a formal decision, but in vain. The sentence of death by crucifixion was finally pronounced, and Jesus was led out toward Calvary.

II. The Crucifixion.—This was trans piring from nine o'clock till three, Friday, April 7, on Calvary, just outside the walls of Jerusalem, beginning and ending at the hours of the daily sacrifice.

As soon as the sentence was pronounced the necessary preparations were made, during which some of the soldiers mocked Jesus again, and then the sad procession moved out of the castle. Two incidents of the journey are described-Simon of Cyrene com pelled to aid Jesus in bearing the cross and Jesus' words to the daughters of Jerusalem. Thus Jesus was aided by the strength of man and the sympathy of Jesus was nailed to the cross while it was lying upon the ground, then it was slowly raised with the sufferer upon it. Crucifixion was an unspeakably awful form of death. The most revolting feature of death by crucifixion was that the torture was deliberately prolonged. Jesus was upon the cross five or six hours, retaining consciousness, while the burning of the wounds in the hands and feet, the uneasiness of the unnatural position, the oppression overcharged veins and the intolerable thirst were constantly increasing. But the most intense sufferings of Jesus were of the spirit. He was bearing the sins of the world.

We may here note four scenes of interest that took place around the cross First, the perting of Christ's raiment by the guard of soldiers, then the cast ing of lots for His inner coat or tunic Second, the shouting, scoffing and mocking of the unruly, turbulent rowd, crying: "He saved others; let Him save Himself" The rulers and soldiers also took part in this mockery. Third, there were friendly watchers amid these exciting somes; the three Marys were there—Mary, the mother of Jesus; Mary, the wife of Cleopas, and Mary Magdalene. His mother's the mother of John, was there, as also many other women from Galilee; John was there, and the other disciples were probably not far away. Fourth, about noon Jesus commits His mother to the care of John.

The conversion of one of the malefactors crucified with Jesus, occurred toward noon. One of the malefactors joined the mob in crying: "If thou be the Christ, save Thyself and us." the other, answering, rebuked him, saying: "Dost not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation? And we, indeed, justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds; but this man hath done nothing amiss. Then the request that immediately follows implies that the robber had heard of some of the teachings of Jesus. He believed in Christ as the Son of God and in the immortality of the soul.

The darkness that fell upon the earth at about 12 o'clock was typical of the powers of darkness seeming to prevail of the sufferings of Jesus, of the despair of the disciples. This lasted till three o'clock, the hour of the evening sacrifice, at which time the veil that hung between the holy place and the holy of holies was rent.

Poel and Wellington

Dean Boyle in his "Reminiscences" tells a striking anecdote of the mutual appreciation of the same quality of high sincerity in public life of the famous statesman, Sir Robert Peel, and the "Iron Duke" of Wellington.

Mr. Wood, a friend of Dean Boyle's, had a constitute when the Duke of had at one time, when the Duke of Wellington was very ill in London, come from the city to a country house at which Poel was visiting. As soon as he arrived, Sir Robert called him aside and saked with intense anxiety what was the latest news of the duke's condition. It was considered hopeless, and Mr. Wood told him so. The great min-ister broke down utterly, crying out with a burst of tears:

"He is the truest man I have ever known!

The duke, however, recovered despite the predictions of his doctors, and survived Peel.

The same gentleman-Mr. Wood-by a curious coincidence was present when Peel was thrown from his horse and received the injuries which resulted in his death. He hastened to his assistance, procured a carriage and accompanied him home, remaining for some time in the house to render the family what services he might in their time of confusion and distress. He was yet there when the Duke of Wellington arrived to make inquiries, and was deputed by Lady Peel to receive him. He hastened to the door and found the duke on the step about to enter the house, and informed him that the physician pro nounced Sir Robert's hurt to be desper ate, and his chance of life almost noth

"He was the soul of truth," said the old soldier huskily, and turning ab-ruptly from the threshold he mounted his horse and rode sorrowfully away.

How the "Editor" Was Made The normal process of the evolution of editors was simply the gradual delegation of powers by the printer or book seller who had first employed some in habitant of Grub street as a drudge, and when the work became too complex and delicate had handed over the duties to men of special literary training. Two very important periodicals, however, of this period show a certain reversion to the olden type. The Edinburgh Review owed part of its success to its independence of publishers. It was started not by a speculator who might wish to puff his own wares, but by a little knot of audacious youths who combined as Steele and Addison combined in The Spectator. It seems that at first they scarcely even contemplated the necessity of an editor, and Sydney Smith was less editor than president of the little committee of authors at the start.

When Jeffrey took up the duty he was careful to make it understood that his work was to be strictly subordinate to his professional labors, and he had no inkling that his fame would come to depend upon his editorship. The Edinburgh, however, soon became a review of the normal kind. Cobbett, on the other hand, started his Political Register as a kind of rival to The Annual Register. It was to be mainly a collection of state papers and official documents, but it soon changed in his hands into the likeness of Defoe's old Review. It became a personal manifesto of Cobbett himself, and as such held a most important place in the journalism of the time. But Cobbett was, and in some ways remains, unique, and, as the newspaper has developed, the "we" has superseded the "I" and the organism become too complex to represent any single person.

The Pumpkin Pie Vindicated. The trouble is not in the pumpkin pies of today. They are compiled with even more skill than those of our grandmothers, for the pumpkin pie has kept step with the progress of the age. The change has been wrought not in the pie, but in those who sit in the gloaming weeping for the good old pies that are gone. We remember our grandmothers' pumpkin pies because then we had not pickled our stomachs with whisky and filled our systems with tobacco and broken down our health by all sorts of excesses, and we didn't have dyspensia until we had to sit up mights and nurse it and drink gallons of sarsaparilla. Green apples and sour gooseberries and gourds tasted good to us then, when we were growing two inches a day and roamed at will in the open air and had more health than we could feed. It would be just as well for us to weep for the green apples and gourds of our grandmothers. Oh, the pies are all right. We've gone wrong, that's all. -Fremont (Neb.) Tribune.
